
Paola MolinaUniversity of Torino, Italy

Social cognition in typical and non-typical development

Paola Molina is a full Professor of Developmental Psychology and Education at the Department of Psychology, University of Turin, Italy. Her current research interests are psychological development in early childhood, particularly the development of self-awareness, social cognition, attachment relationships, and the development of familiar contexts and institutional settings.

